The watercolours of the layout of the chapel show the general arrangement with two rows of benches on each side of the aisle.

The press article on the opening of the cemetery refers to the mechanism, presumably in the aisle for the lowering of coffins from the chapel into the catacombs. There is an external route into the crypt via a stairway to the east of the chapel. There are references to the proposed building of cloisters on either side of the chapel 'over the catacombs'. The photographs show that the catacombs are wholly within the confines of the chapel and do not extend under the grass around the chapel.

The walls have a series of memorial plaques, which are described in this section. There is a single external plaque on the eastern wall.

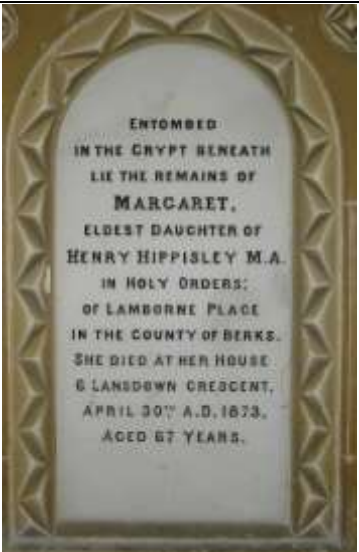

Access to the tower is via an external door which is now inaccessible having been closed by a metal shutter. The windows in the tower suggest that it contains two levels.

Sir James Ashley Maude, Captain in the Royal Navy, C.B., and brother of Viscount Hawarden, after a lingering illness of several months' duration, died at his residence in Regency-square, Brighton at 6 o'clock on Saturday morning. The deceased played a conspicuous part at the Battle of Navarino, on the 20th of October, 1827, and afterwards received the honour of knighthood for the bravery which he displayed on that occasion. He was born on the 6th of November, 1876, and was consequently in his 55th year. In 1817, he married Albinia, second daughter of the late Most Rev. Charles Brodrick, Archbishop of Cashell, and Lady Maude and one daughter, the issue of the marriage, both survive. The Dowager Viscountess Hawarden and the Hon. Miss Maude, who are staying at the Bedford Hotel, have for a considerable period been in close attendance on the deceased. Viscount Hawarden arrived at the Bedford on Thursday night, for the purpose of having a last interview with his dying brother; and on Saturday morning, two hours after Sir Ashley Maude had breathed his last, the noble viscount received intelligence of another bereavement in his family, in the death of a sister of Lady Hawarden, in consequence of which he left Brighton on the same day. In the 1851 census at 13 Somerset Place, Bath: Albinia Maude, aged 61, widow, fundholder, born at Cork, Mary I E A, aged 19, daughter, born at St Mary le Bow, London, Louisa Scott, aged 57, married, visitor, wife of a Queen's Counsel practising in Ireland, born at Cork, Louisa H Scott, aged 14, visitor, born at Dublin, three servants and a servant to Mrs Scott. The death of Mary Isabella Emma Albinia Maude was registered 1859/Q4 Clifton. In the 1861 census at Wimbledon (Surrey): Albenia Maude, aged 71, widow, Hon. Catacombs

The catacombs are beneath the chapel. Access is via a flight of steps on the eastern side outside the chapel which leads to the door.

The ceiling is barrel-vaulted. Provision was made for 90 places with 50 on the west side arranged as 5 rows and 10 columns and 40 on the east side arranged either side of the door as 5 rows and 4 columns. Of these 42 have been used. At the northern end are a pair of blocked-up windows, possibly allowing for potential extension. There is an alcove at the southern end.

This gives a history of the family, that it was English and went to Ireland and stayed there for two hundred years. The follows relates to Sackville Hatch Lovett and his wife Bridget: Christopher Lovett, his son Robert, and his grandson Sackville, were all in the Customs House, the latter becoming Comptroller there. The reader will possibly be interested in something further about Sackville Lovett. He lived at Monkstown House where his fourth son Robert, father of the writer of this paper, was born and brought up, being educated at Trinity College. Sackville Lovett was a Captain of Yeomanry, and for forty years a Justice of the Peace for Dublin. His association with the Yeomanry led to the following incident. At the time of the troubles in '98 the Dublin to Belfast coach was held up and burned in or near Santry, and Captain Sackville Lovett one night received instructions to take his troop of yeomanry out to Santry next day and burn the village. He rose very early in the morning and rode out alone to Santry to tell the villagers of the orders which it had become his duty to carry out, and to suggest that they should remove their belongings out of their houses before he came later in the day. Having returned to breakfast, he rode with his yeomanry in the forenoon towards Santry. Before reaching the village he gave orders to his troop to proceed at walking-pace, and galloped on himself to see that the village had been cleared. All that remained in any of the houses was a hen sitting on her eggs in the chimney corner of one small cottage. He carefully removed the hen and the eggs into a hedge nearby and went back to meet his troop just entering the village. He carried out his orders and then sent the troop home, riding further on some other business. Returning in the evening by the
