Will of Marcia Lamb, Widow of Bath, Somerset, date 7 May 1845, PROB 11/2018. From the Encyclopaedia Britannica 1911: JUBBULPORE, or Jabalpur, a city, district, and division of British India in the Central Provinces. The city is 616 m. N.E. of Bombay by rail, and 220 m. S.W. of Allahabad. Pop. (1901), 90,316. The numerous gorges in the neighbouring rocks have been taken advantage of to surround the city with a series of lakes, which, shaded by fine trees and bordered by fantastic crags, add much beauty to the suburbs. The city itself is modern, and is laid out in wide and regular streets. A streamlet separates the civil station and cantonment from the native quarter; but, though the climate is mild, a swampy hollow beneath renders the site unhealthy for Europeans. Formerly the capital of the Saugor and Nerbudda territories, Jubbulpore is now the headquarters of a brigade in the 5th division of the southern army. It is also one of the most important railway centres in India, being the junction of the Great Indian Peninsula and the East Indian systems. It has a steam cotton-mill. The government college educates for the science course of the Allahabad University, and also contains law and engineering classes; there are three aided high schools, a law class, an engineering class and normal schools for male and female teachers. A native association, established in 1869, supports an orphanage, with help from government. A zenana mission manages 13 schools for girls. Waterworks were constructed in 1882.

At 9 o'clock the band struck up “God save the King,” and the committee, accompanied by the gallant Colonel, and headed by the lessee, Mr. Bellamy, carrying the jewel of office on a superb cushion of crimson and gold satin damask, entered the great room, and proceeded to the state chair at the upper end of the ball-room, in which was seated the Countess of Belmore, surrounded by several ladies also connected with the noble families of the three kingdoms. ... His will limited his heir's ability to build on the land as they could only grant short agricultural leases. This impeded the younger Sir Thomas' desire to develop land for housing following trends in neighbouring areas. Residential development had reached St John's Wood, while Hampstead Village had a growing population during the 18th century. The development of Finchley Road also brought urban development closer to Hampstead when the turnpike was built by Colonel Eyre of the Eyre estates connecting St John's Wood to Finchley in 1827. The Blue Star Line founded in 1911 by the Vestey family to carry their chilled beef from Argentina and other South American countries was sold to P&O Nedlloyd in 1998 and the latter was acquired by AP Moller Maersk Group (Maersk) in 2005. In 'This Inglorious Business' from 'Singapore: The Pregnable Fortress' by Peter Elphick, Hodder & Stoughton, London, 1995: "The Empire Star was alongside Keppel Harbour wharf on 11th February [1942] when her master, Captain Selwyn Capon, OBE, received orders from Naval HQ to evacuate women, children, air force personnel, and certain other officially-designated escapees as part of the last "big ship" evacuation convoy." The Empire Star was one of the last major ships to leave Singapore before its fall to the Japanese, officially at 6.10 pm Sun 11 Feb 1942, leaving at daybreak on the 12th. The ship was attacked from the air several times while in the Durian Strait; it suffered three direct hits with 16 killed and 17 severely wounded. Vigorous evasive action limited further damage. Of the sixteen ships that left Singapore, the Empire Star was one of the two that was not sunk and arrived at Tanjong Priok, Batavia's port. After 48 hours there, the ship proceeded to Fremantle where it was repaired. Capt. Capon who had been awarded an O.B.E. in the First World War, became a Commander of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire as a result of this event. The Empire Star was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine (U-615) in the North Atlantic, north of the Azores, on 23 Oct 1942, while on a voyage from Liverpool to East London, South Africa, travelling unescorted. Four men were killed on board. There were three remaining lifeboats. Two of the lifeboats were picked up two days later but the captain's boat with 26 crew, 6 gunners and 6 passengers was never seen again. For further information see Blue Star Line: A Record of service 1939-1945 by Taffrail (Captain Taprell Dorling DSO, FRHistS, RN), London Blue Star, 1948.

The interdenominational organisation, which focused on training missionaries for areas outside the British Empire, changed its name in 1899. It also trained the missionaries in medical matters. During the 1880's Bromley Hall, Gillender Street, Bow Back, East London was used by the RBMU to house nurses. An example of Henry Grattan's speeches can be found in the New York Times of Wed 27 Apr 1900 in an article entitled HIGHER EDUCATION QUESTION.; Position Religion Should Occupy in Course of Study Argued at Central Presbyterian Church which reported his speech in which he advocated sending missionaries to areas where there was no 'evangelical place of worship', citing examples of Africa: "Just look at this map of the horseshoe bend of the Congo River. Here is a town, Bongandanga, where there is a small mission. North of it there is no place of worship within 2,000 miles - not until you come to the shores of the Mediterranean. East of it you must go to the shores of the Indian Ocean before you come to an evangelical place of worship. West there is only one mission between it and the Atlantic. South you must travel 1,500 miles be[f]ore you come to the advance wave of civilization and the first mission." (The interdenominational aspects of the organisation would seem to have been limited to 'evangelical' denominations and biographies describe him as being bitterly opposed to the Roman Catholic Church.) The organisation changed its name to Horizons in 1981 before merging with World Team in 1995. Its archive was deposited with the Centre for the Study of Christianity in the Non-Western World and contains minutes, correspondence and reports and newsletters. The School of Oriental and African Studies, London has the Banks Photographic Collection from Rev. Alexander L. Banks, who served as a missionary with the Regions Beyond Missionary Union and was based at Siwan, Northern India. The Times of Wed 22 Jun 1910 (pg. 13; Issue 39305; col D had the following obituary: The Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, D.D., F.R.A.S, F.R.G.S., died yesterday at Bath, where he resided for over two years. He had been confined to his house for the past four months, and for some time had not appeared on any public platform. He spent the end of his life in writing books. Dr. Guinness was born near Dublin in 1835, being the son of Captain John Guinness, H.E.I.C.S. He was educated at New College, London, and carried on evangelistic work in England and Ireland and other countries. In conjunction with his wife he founded in 1873 the East London Institute for the training of young men for home evangelization and foreign missions. Gradually, however, as Bible training institutions sprang into existence both in America and in this country, the preparation of workers was concentrated on the foreign field only. In the course of 37 years the one training institution has developed into three, and four foreign missionary movements, in Central Africa, South America, and India, have sprung into existence, the whole work being now known under the title of "The Regions Beyond Missionary Union." The Union is unsectarian. The Congo Balolo Mission, which it supported, was instrumental in revealing certain abuses of the Free State Administration, and Dr. Guinness at one time took a prominent part in the agitation in this country. Dr. Guinness was also the author (in conjunction with his late wife) of several works on Prophecy, which have had large circulations, the principal of these being "The Approaching End of the Age in the Light of History, Prophecy, and Science," which has gone to 14 editions. A series of popular lectures delivered many years ago in Exeter Hall were subsequently published under the title "Romanism and the Reformation from the Standpoint of Prophecy."

			Abbot. In the 1871 census at 12 Melbourne Street, Exeter: Jessie S Norcott, aged 20, unmarried, visitor, servant, born at Combeinteignhead (Devon). From A History of the Church of England in India Since the Early Days of the East India Company by Eyre Chatterton, Bishop of Nagpur, London: SPCK, 1924 in Chapter XIV. The Diocese of Bombay, 1837: “When we turn from this description of the Bombay Presidency and Diocese to its past history, we notice at once how closely the life of the diocese and that of the Presidency have run side by side. The first Archdeacon of Bombay was appointed just about the time when the greater portion of the dominions of the Mahratta Peshwa passed into the hands of the British. The Bombay Presidency, as we now have it, reached its present size about the time of the appointment of the first Bishop of Bombay. Barnes, the first Archdeacon of Bombay, was a man of great energy and earnestness. He had been a College friend of Bishop Heber. During his period no less than five Churches were built at Surat, Thana, Kaira, Poona, and Baroda: all of which were consecrated by his friend Bishop Heber during his visit to Bombay in 1824. Archdeacon Barnes was succeeded in the Archdeaconry by Thomas Carr, who in the year 1837 was consecrated first Bishop of Bombay. When he resigned, fourteen years later, he had served in India as Chaplain, Archdeacon, and Bishop for thirty-four years, and had only once visited England during that period, and that visit was for his Consecration. He must have been a fine-looking man, judging by his recumbent statue in Bombay Cathedral, and he certainly had a magnificent constitution. To have endured the Bombay climate for thirty-four years without any of the amenities of life, punkahs, ice and hill stations, which we now enjoy, was a rare thing in those bygone days.” From Gentleman's Magazine vol VII (new series) Jul-Dec 1859, p427: Sept. 5. At Bath, aged 71, the Right Rev. Thomas Carey, .D. (B.A. 1813), St. John's College, Cambridge, Bishop of Bombay 1836 to 1851, Rector of Bath (1854). The deceased prelate was educated at St. John's Cambridge, where, in 1813, he distinguished himself as senior optime. In 1836 he was appointed Bishop of Bombay, but resigned in 1851, in consequence of ill health. In 1854, when the Hon. and Rev. W. J. Brodrick became a resident canon at Wells, Bishop Carr was

			appointed to succeed him in the Rectory of Bath; and during the five years he had resided there, he won and retained the esteem of all who came within the sphere of his ministry. Dr. Carr continued in his usual good health, and zealously discharged his onerous duties, until about three weeks ago, when he was seized with paralysis, which rendered him completely prostrate. Feeling that he had finished the work appointed for him to do on earth, his Lordship immediately resigned his living, and though the hand of death lay heavily upon him, he waited his period of dissolution with that calmness and serenity which had ever marked his career through life. His Lordship's high social position never withdrew him from a familiar parochial intercourse with his parishioners; and it must now be recorded of him that as he was universally beloved in this city, his loss is now universally regretted. The remains of the deceased prelate were conveyed to their last earthly resting-place in the Widcombe cemetery. The funeral left Lansdown-crescent at 10 o'clock, and whilst passing Stall-street, was joined by the parochial clergy and children of the Blue Coat Schools, who previously assembled in the abbey church. The Burial Service was read by the Lord Bishop of the Diocese, Lord Auckland. A marble effigy of Bishop Carr, in repose, exists in Bombay's St Thomas Cathedral. The National Portrait Gallery has: Thomas Carr by Richard James Lane, printed by Michael and Nicholas Hanhart lithograph, 1852 11 3/4 in. x 9 5/8 in. 			and George Venables occupied the site around 1840, being well known in the High Wycombe and Cookham areas as papermakers, and it is likely that the mill was mechanised at this time. Charles was a doughty proponent of the rights of employers and wrote in no uncertain terms about reductions in children's hours of work in 1843: 'If the present government having done all that can be done to injure and ruin the papermaking trade in the United Kingdom by the protection and assistance given to the foreign manufacture, any further interference would be unjust and arbitrary in the extreme and uncalled for.' A contemporary newspaper said: 'There was the authentic voice of thunder from Charles Venables of Taplow Mill. Fair and free competition in trade is also not a new desire!' The Venables family were very active and are noted around 1840 as operating nine mills locally, including one at Cookham.
