Introduction

The church of St Mary, Compton Dando

The parish is now part of the United Benefice of Publow with Pensford, Compton Dando and Chelwood.

From the Imperial Gazetteer of England and Wales 1870-2:

COMPTON-DANDO, a parish in Keynsham district, Somerset; on Wans dyke and an affluent of the river Avon, 2 miles E by N of Pensford, and 3 SSW of Saltford r. station. It includes Tucking-Mills hamlet and part of Woolard; and its post town is Pensford under Bristol. Acres, 1, 974. Real property, £3, 081. Pop., 347. Houses, 77. The property is all in one estate. The living is a vicarage in the diocese of Bath and Wells. Value, £180.* Patron, the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church has a square tower, and is good; and there are a Wesleyan chapel, and charities £75.

The dates on the church's walls suggest that the southern porch was added in 1735 along with the chancel being extended and the northern aisle added in 1905. The building in Grade II* listed by Historic England and this refers to "Anglican parish church. C14, altered C15 and subsequently; chancel restored 1735 and 1905, porch restored 1793, north aisle rebuilt 1820 and vestry added in 1840. Consists of west tower, nave and south porch, north aisle, chancel and vestry."

The eastern wall has, on the outside, a stone carved with '1735' and '1905 AD'. The porch has a stone carved with the year '1793'. On the tower, one stone has a carving of a Tudor rose. The tower also has a carving of a 'daisy wheel'; such carvings are believed to have been placed in houses and churches to avert evil. There is also a daisy wheel made up of inscribed overlapping circles on the outside wall of the church in the eastern side. No scratch dial has been found, any such would probably have disappeared when the porch was added as they tend to be found by the southern door. There is however, the remains of a sundial (without its gnomon), west of the porch.

From The Bristol Mercury of Sat 30 Apr 1853 p8:

INQUESTS HELD BEFORE MR. BRUGES FRY, CORONER.—At Compton Dando on the body of Martha Harvey, illegitimate child of Elizabeth Harvey, aged 5 days. From the fact of the grandmother having privately applied to the sexton to bury the child, which was not baptized, or a medical man called in until it was dying, and the doctor was passing the door, an inquest was deemed necessary by the parish officers. It resulted in a verdict of "Died of Convulsions," in accordance with the opinion of Mr. Collins, the medical witness, who stated that an opiate might possibly have caused these symptoms, but could not be discovered on a post-mortem examination, as the quantity to be administered to so young a child could not be detected. He regretted to say that the practice of administering opiates to children was very much resorted to in the neighbourhood.

From The Western Flying Post (Yeovil) of Tue 3 Aug 1858 p8 in an account of the excursions of the Archæological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland.

Compton Dando was the next stage at which the party stopped. Outside the church and built into one of the corner buttresses, the Rev. Mr. Scarth pointed out the remains of a Roman altar, said to have been dug out of the Wansdyke, with figures imperfectly discernible of Apollo striking the lyre, and Hercules with apparently a lion's skin. Mr. Scarth stated that it was thought very probable that an inscription might be found on the back portion of this interesting curiosity, and so, with the consent of the vicar and churchwardens it was taken out and examined, but it was discovered that the back portion had been cut away, as well as the top, at the time of insertion into the buttress. Then followed an extended drive to Stanton Drew. . . .

From The Bath Chronicle of Sat 26 Jun 1915 p2:

On Wednesday afternoon a new lych-gate at the entrance to the churchyard of Compton Dando Church was dedicated by Prebendary H. Vaughan, Rural Dean of Chew and Portishead. . . . The cost of the lych-gate was defrayed by the feoffees of Compton Dando Church Estate. . . . The structure, executed in pitch-pine and roofed with dun-colour Broseley tiles, has each gable surmounted by a Latin cross, and bears on the frontal beam the word "Resurgam." . . .

The Charity which provided the funds for both the lych-gate and the restoration is a very ancient one, being one of the very few similar foundations which escaped attention and confiscation at the Reformation. The primary object of the founder was to provide a fund for maintaining the fabric and the services of the church of Compton Dando, and secondly, relief of the poor of the village. Like many another, the Charity fell on evil days and suffered maladministration after the Reformation, but some 50 years ago was rescued and restored. . . ."

From the Shepton Mallet Journal of Fri 27 Sep 1929 p4:

A war memorial was unveiled at Compton Dando, on Saturday, by Colonel the Hon. E. Strachey.

There was a longer report in the Western Daily Press of Mon 23 Sep 1929 p8 which refers to the memorial being erected by public subscription at a cost of about £68 and "takes to form of a Columbo cross in silver grey Cornish granite rustic with fine axed faces for lettering".

Issue 1

The war memorial is not in the graveyard but on the corner of Bathford Hill and Church View.

(A 'Columbo cross' is more commonly known as a Celtic cross or sometimes as an Ionic cross after the isle of Iona, rather than anything Greek.)

From the Bath Weekly Chronicle and Herald of Sat 10 Dec 1938 p34:

About 1917, the Rev. Eldred Morgan then Vicar of Compton Dando, brought two pennant stones from the churchyard into the church. They were from the top and bottom of an ancient coffin lid or ledger stone, five inches thick. There is an inscription down the middle lengthwise, not round the edge as on the similar one at Bristol Cathedral. . . .

The incised stone at Compton appears to read: ROG; NORMANO: GIST: ICI (?): DEU . . . . RY . . PAT: NOSTER with about eight inches between RY and PAT unreadable.

The Taunton Courier of 22 Jul 1939 p4 (and subsequent editions in 1940) carried an enquiry about why a 'heathen' Roman altar had been built into the NE buttress of Compton Dando church. This had a figure of Hercules with his club on the east face and Apollo with his lyre on the north face. The view of Rev H M Scarth was "I am inclined to think that previously to the extension of Christianity to Britain, and the building of a church at Compton Dando, a small Temple or Shrine had existed in the pretty and secluded valley where the church now stands. Roman altars have not infrequently been found buried in Christian churchyards." It was subsequently established that it was part of the altar in the Roman temple within the bath complex at Bath and was reinstated there as one of the four corners. (Two other corners have been found, one depicting Hercules and Jupiter and another with the figure of Bacchus).

Historic England has an entry 1115375 for 'unidentified monument in the churchyard 15 yards to east of St Mary's church . . . Chest tomb. Mid-late C18. Limestone ashlar. Illegible inscribed panels; enriched pilasters; moulded frieze, base and cornice.' From the location and description, this is memorial 66.

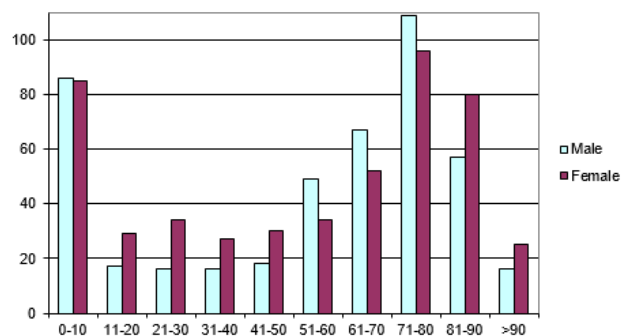

After centuries of laws against those who did not accept the Church of England's doctrines and its presumed monopoly of truth as regards Christian doctrine, the early 19th-century relaxation of the restrictions provoked various negative reactions. These were usually protests from Anglican clergymen about parishioners going over to the 'church of Rome'. At Compton Dando in 1850 a petition and an address to the Bishop of Bath & Wells was circulated against a perceived 'act of invasion'. From the Bath Chronicle of Thu 14 Nov 1850 p4:

COMPTON DANDO.—The following Protest and Address have been extensively signed in this parish.

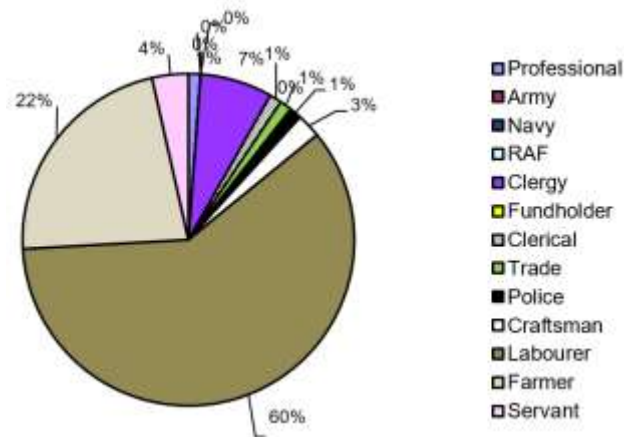

PROTEST.—Whereas, the Bishop of Rome, in pursuance of an aggressive policy, not attempted in this country since the Reformation by the boldest of his predecessors, has presumed to nominate a Romish ecclesiastic as Archbishop of Westminster, and to designate other English cities or towns as episcopal sees in communion with the Bishop of Rome; and more especially as concerning the undersigned, has affected to transfer the episcopal charge of our Right Reverend Father in God from his hands to those of an affected Bishop of Plymouth.

We, the undersigned, inhabitants of the Parish of Compton Dando, in the Diocese of Bath and Wells, do most solemnly protest against, and expressly renounce, this audacious act of invasion and usurpation on the part of the Bishop of Rome, and do hereby pledge ourselves, individually and collectively, to do all that in us lieth, and by every lawful means, to resist this and every other encroachment upon the rights and liberties of this Church and Nation.

The matter was probably not uppermost in the preoccupations of the mainly farming population of the village and was presumably got up by the vicar with the support of the local gentry.

The age profile has 18% aged under 11 and 40% aged over 70. Where occupations have been determined, about 60% were labourers and 22% farmers. The birth countries are predominantly England (98%).

Of the 1,679 burial register entries in the period 1701-present, about 18% have names that appear on memorials.

There is an enigmatic entry: John Gay buried on 3 Jun 1740 with the annotation “supposed to be murdered by his master James Perry”.

		From the Western Daily Press of 12 Aug 1909 p5 col b:            SHOOTING FATALITY AT            STAPLETON ROAD. An occurrence of a very sad nature took place last night, about eight o'clock, in a house at Stapleton Road, a woman being killed by a bullet wound from a rifle. It appears that the husband, Arthur John Jones, who is a plumber, living at 245, Stapleton Road, was cleaning an old rifle in the kitchen. He was unaware that it was loaded, and went to turn the dog out of the room, when the rifle went off, the bullet striking Mrs Jones in the head and killing her instantly. Mr and Mrs Jones had been married about eleven years, and have, we understand, lived on most affectionate terms, and the sad disaster has almost prostrated him with grief. Deceased was about 34 years of age. The inquest was reported in the Western Daily Press of Fri 13 Aug 1909 p5 col f. This refers to Mr Arthur J Jones as "a well-known plumber, painter, and general decorator" and that he had "a black spaniel dog which usually accompanied his brother-in-law for a walk when he went out on Wenesday evenings". The brother is identified as Frank Flower who lived at the same address. The verdict was "accidental death". In the 1911 census as a visitor at 102 Gasscot Road, Tooting: Arthur John Jones, aged 36, widower, master plumber, born at Bristol.
