Introduction

The church of All Saints, Dunkerton

From the Bath Chronicle of Thu 7 Jul 1859 p3:

RESTORATION OF DUNKERTON CHURCH.—On the road to Wells, five miles from Bath, a small tower peeps from among the trees of a little secluded valley—this is the tower of Dunkerton church, now being restored, partly by subscription, and partly at the expense of the Rector, the Rev. F. Sowden. In order to ensure the future stability of the structure, it was found necessary to remove much more of the original building than was first contemplated, and in doing so, the steps and entrance to the rood-loft was disclosed, as well as a curious piece of carving, which may, probably, have formed the tabernacle to a saint, of the frame of a picture of some equally honoured. The chancel is a very pretty little specimen of the decorated period, but the remainder, with the exception of the western window, has always been supposed to be of a date little anterior to the reign of Henry VII, but an early southern doorway has now been brought to light, of very plain form, and circular-headed, showing that this church, together with those of Priston, Englishcombe, Southstoke, and Langridge, were in existence certainly prior to the time of Stephen. We should state that, on removing the roof, the “Ten Commandments” were found painted in black letter, in similar type to the post-reformation painting on the south wall of Bradford-on-Avon Church. The restorations are being carried on under the superintendence of Mr. Charles S. Davis, architect of this city; we have, therefore, every confidence that the new work will be carried out in true harmony with the original structure. A sum of money is still, we believe, wanting to complete what is now commenced. We trust many of our readers will gladly come forward to the rescue.

From the Bath Chronicle of Thu 21 Jul 1859 p8:

DUNKERTON

To the EDITOR of the BATH CHRONICLE

Sir,—In a recent number of the Chronicle you state that Dunkerton Church is now being restored, partly by subscription, and partly at the expense of the Rector. I think it only fair to the worshippers of Dunkerton to say that they have handsomely voted a rate of sixpence in the pound in aid of the funds required.—Your obedient servant, FREDERICK SOWDEN, Vicar of Dunkerton.

From the Bath Chronicle of Thu 22 Jan 1874 p7:

The Rev. Frederick Sowdon, rector of Dunkerton, has changed his surname to that of Grosvenor and will in future be known as the Rev. Frederick Grosvenor.

From the Bath Chronicle of Thu 1 Sep 1892 p3:

Restored village churches abound on every hand, their improved condition bearing testimony to the earnestness and activity of Churchmen and of the self-denying labours of the much-abused parson, who shares with the squire the antipathy of political levellers. It is a pity that these people are not better acquainted with the interior of our renewed fabrics: the work accomplished, assuring them as it does that shrines for the worship of the common Father are perpetuated through the liberality displayed, would remove their prejudices, even if it did not foster the wish to preserve what they now seek, in their ignorance, to destroy. Such are the thoughts that occurred to us a day or two since when we found ourselves in Dunkerton Church listening to the Rector's description of the various changes and additions he has made during his sixteen years' incumbency. The edifice is not striking in its architectural features: it is, in fact, extremely plain, consisting of a chancel and nave, opening into the tower; but the neatness and order, coupled with the taste displayed in all its details, compensate for the lack of art in its structural features. Everything supplied, even to carpets, rungs, and books, are of the very best. A beautiful addition recently made is the pulpit: its base is of a rose-coloured alabaster and its upper portion of hammered iron work of light and graceful design. The organ, which occupies part of the space beneath the tower, has likewise, since it was first opened, received sundry additions, and is now one of the finest to be found in any of the churches around. Its case is composed of oak and walnut, relieved by charmingly-coloured pipes, and appropriate figures of bronze, which form terminals on the instrument and the screen in the rear of the organist. The Communion Table is in harmony; its chief materials are oak and cedar, the carved emblems it bears in relief being in keeping with its use. In the reading desk and the ends of the choir seats the adornments present the same suggestive character. The alms dish and candlesticks, and the various lamps used for lighting purposes, are of bronze delicately wrought, some being of English and other of foreign workmanship. All the windows are filled with coloured glass, the tone being the same throughout, but the subjects depicted are varied though affiliated. The course adopted in regard to these is one that has much to commend it. Before taking any step, the Rector called in Mr. Bell, of the firm of Clayton and Bell, who examined the church, and with the knowledge thus obtained designed the entire series of windows. As funds permitted light after light was inserted until all were complete, with the result that instead of the incongruities too often observed harmony pervades the whole. The edifice is likewise well ventilated, and is heated with hot air, which explained the freshness and absence of anything approaching a damp odour.

How has this been accomplished? The Rector has been, it is true, a liberal donor, and in addition occasional fees, which were his due, have found their way to the improvement fund; but not the least subject of congratulation is that all through he has enlisted the sympathy of the parishioners. "We have no squire, or wealthy folk; farmers are the principal residents, and they with their wives have cordially assisted. Look at the pulpit: one gave me the cost of a piece of the alabaster moulding, another one of the slabs in front, and so on. Yes, it was costly; but it was paid for as soon as it was finished. In fact, fragmentary as has been our progress we have never ordered anything until we had the money in hand or in sight. You ask whether there have been any difficulties: well, there has been a little delay on that account, but it has never caused any friction: I have never pressed forward anything until I was sure of perfect agreement." Such were the comments made by the worthy Rector as he escorted us round his model little church, and we thought them too suggestive not to place them on record.

The raising of a parish rate for Anglican purposes on all households, whether Anglican or not, met with increasing resistance. This came to a head in 1903 in Bath when a levy via the parish rate for Anglican schools led to people withholding the relevant amount and 125 summonses were issued against 'passive resisters'.

From the Bath Chronicle of Thu 4 Apr 1901 p5:

Some extensive and much-needed work has been carried out in Dunkerton Church, which was re-opened last Sunday after the completion of the work. The organ, erected in 1877 by William Hill and Son, of London, has been repaired cleaned, and improved. The plaster ceiling of the nave between the beams, which in course of years had become a source of continual danger and expense, has been replaced by timber. The chancel roof, which was in good preservation, and required no repairs, has been painted and decorated. In consequence of the additional work required the original estimates have been exceeded, for organ and roof, and although the sums collected have been sufficient to defray the original estimates, a small debt remains.

From Primitive Sun Dials or Scratch Dials - Containing a list of those in Somerset by Dom

Ethelbert Horne (1858-1952), (The Wessex Press, Taunton 1917) p41:

DUNKERTON CHURCH

20. On the S.W. buttress of the tower, on the E. side of it, at a height of about 10 or 12 feet from the ground, is a stone used for repairing that appears to have a dial upon it. It is upside down, and the stylehole is open. There are about five lines ending in dents, about 3½ inches in size. It is out of reach, and is altogether a doubtful dial. April 17th, 1913.

Microfiche copies of the burial registers 1752-1888 are available at Bath Record Office. The burial register from 1888 is still in use and in May 2017 had reached entry 644. The parish also has a handwritten grave index.
