Introduction

From the Imperial Gazetteer of England and Wales 170-72 by John Marius Wilson:

SALTFORD, a village and a parish in Keynsham district, Somerset. The village stands on the river Avon, adjacent to the Great Western railway, 5 miles W N W of Bath; is a neat and pleasant place; and has a station on the railway, and a post-office, designated Saltford, Somerset. The parish comprises 880 acres. Real property, £2,522. Pop., 373. Houses, 83. The property is divided among a few. S. House is the seat of Vice-Admiral B. M. Kelly. S. tunnel, on the railway, is approached through a deep cutting in lias rocks, and is 499 feet long. The living is a rectory in the diocese of Bath and Wells. Value, £200.* Patron, J. G. Hill, Esq. The church was restored in 1851. There is an endowed school.

From the Church Rambler - A Series of Articles on the Churches in the Neighbourhood of Bath by Harold Lewis (1876):

Yet the natural position of Saltford is delightful. Standing upon what the Americans call a bluff you look down commandingly upon the broad meads and beautiful valley through which the Avon winds its way to the sea. Running along in front of the prettily wooded slopes on the Kelston side of the river the line of the Midland Railway can be traced for a long distance, and on the other side is the Great Western main line, so there is no lack of that animation which the passing train imparts to the landscape, at least in the opinion of the town-bred observer. Few rectories, even in this pleasant land, enjoy a finer prospect than this, which is bounded in one direction by the smoke of Bristol and in the other by the hills which shelter Bath.

The church itself consists of a chancel, nave and tower, to which a vestry has been added, but it was restored in 1851 on very utilitarian principles and I cannot say there is much in it to interest the archaeologist beyond one or two good Perpendicular windows. Another of these has suffered a curious fate. At some period of its existence its tracery has been destroyed, and when the time came to repair it instead of restoring it in accordance with the windows beside it the builder calmly carried up the mullions and made a square top to the window – an exact copy of the sill inverted, so that in effect he has let a stone gridiron into the wall. The tower has been “mended” also and presents no particular point of interest. It contains only one bell, with the inscription—

PERROT FENTON. CHURCHWARDEN, T. MEARS OF LONDON.
FECIT 1820.

Within the church we have a flat ceiling, old-fashioned pews and a western organ gallery wherein are placed the singers and the school girls, the latter of whom are not particularly attentive to the service. The walls are covered with plaster but the chancel arch seems to show traces of Early English work. The font is one of the most interesting in the neighbourhood. It is heptagonal in shape with seven angels' heads at the base of the shaft.

There is also a tablet in the church to the memory of Benedictus Marwood Kelly, Admiral of the Blue, in her Majesty's service, erected by his widow in affectionate remembrance of a beloved husband. The lady who erected that tablet still lives in the village; and just above the churchyard there is a new school, with this inscription over the doorway: – “Rebuilt by Juliana Kelly, 1874” The same lady does much to assist the poor and the aged; beside many other things she distributes coal during the winter, and in the summer gives a treat to young and old in the field in the front of Saltford house. She visits the people in their houses, and in fact does everything in her power to promote their welfare.

Like the adjacent manor of Keynsham, Saltford was annexed to the honour of Gloucester and held thereof in the time of Henry III. and Edward I. by the family of Bayouse. They were succeeded by the Bassets, and then the Bodneys, of whom I have spoken. Afterwards it passed to the Brydges family, that of the dukes of Chandos and remained with them till the dispersion of all their property in this neighbourhood about a quarter of a century ago.

The New Ground

In 1894 the churchyard was extended to the east. A plaque on the northern wall of this new section has:

TO THE GLORY OF GOD and to the use of the Parish of Saltford for ever this added portion of the Churchyard was made a free gift by MAJOR LAMOROCK FLOWER
A.D. 1894

Previous Surveys

There have been a number of surveys of the churchyard over recent decades: between 1960 and 1982 by Frank Vine, in 1988 by Gordon Reed and Eddie Cooper, in 1999 by Miriam Hare and in 2004 by Nigel Newbery. The 2004 documentation states that 'no attempt has been made to replicate individual type styles' and the sizes of font and the use of italics don't reproduce the actual appearance of the inscriptions. This documentation was not generally available.

In this survey an attempt has been made to show the general forms of the inscriptions using different font sizes etc. In addition reference has been made to the parish register where there are ambiguities in the names and dates.

In the 1980s the headstones in the old part of the churchyard were moved and placed along the western and southern walls. A photograph in the vestry dating from about 1924 shows that arrangement of memorials at that time

The burial register (entry 553) specifies that 'various 18th & 19th century human remains excavated during the archaeological dig' were buried on 7 Sep 1994 in front of grave 1.16. (This corresponds to Row A near the Selman chest tomb.)

The average number of burials per year has been typically between 6 and 8. There was a peak in 1837 which occurred elsewhere in Bath due to an influenza epidemic. There were other peaks which are probably not significant. However in 1886 there were 21 burials with an average age of 31.

Occupants

Ages are present in the burial registers from 1837. The age profile shows that 15.4% of those buried were aged under 11 and 41.2% were aged over 70. This is contrast with, for example, Widcombe - a poor urban parish - where 44% were aged under 11 and 14% aged over 70.

The occupations have been obtained for 180 men (18%) and the split between the different types of occupation are typical for a farming community which also has some other activities. In the case of Saltford the other sorts of employment were the brassworks and the railway. The 7% for clergy is untypical and results from former rectors being buried at Saltford.

The country of birth of most of those buried is England with 4% from Wales and very few from other countries. There are some unusual origins such as 2 from Ukraine (then part of Russia) and one from Argentina.

Refreshments were served in a spacious marquee, which was decorated for the occasion with flags, banners, mottoes, etc. At the entrance to the field a trophy of flags, with the motto at the centre— "Welcome," in crimson letters on a white ground—had a very pretty effect, Inside, swings and all kinds of amusements were provided for the juveniles, whilst those of older growth were enlivened with the strains of the Saltford Brass Band, which played an excellent selection of music. After tea there was a number of well-contested sports, comprising jumping, races, tugs-of-war, &c. . . . Cremation Memorials

In the period 1973 until about 1990 the burial of cremated remains in the churchyard were not entered into the burial register. There is however a 'cremation book' in the church which lists the names of those whose cremated remains were buried.

There is also list of the burials of ashes from the 2004 survey with their locations but just as a list of names.

Lost Memorials

A series of memorials identified in the 1968 survey are now lost. The transcripts of the inscriptions have mostly lowercase letters. The style of the other memorials of this period would suggest that they are mainly in uppercase with the biblical quotations in a smaller font and italicised. The following are the transcripts from the original survey put in the expected style.
