Names	Inscriptions	Notes
		“Lambourn Place, a large Tudor mansion, situated on the north side of Lambourn church, was owned by Sir Thomas Essex who died in 1558. It then passed to Sir Thomas Wilmot for most of the 17th century and eventually to the Hippisley family who rebuilt it in Victorian times. Henry Hippisley made over his Lambourn and Sparsholt estates to third son William Henry in 1886 who then sold Lambourn Place to his brother-in-law Charles Edwards, thus ending nearly 250 years association with the Hippisleys. The house and outbuildings were used as racing stables in the late 1880's by James Humphrey a prominent trainer, it was pulled down in 1938 after falling into decay. There are many stories and myths about the site, one is that the location of Lambourn Place was the original site of one of King Alfred's palaces. Another is that the grounds were once haunted by the last of the ancient family of Hippisley. Henry Hippisley died in the late 19th century, having spent an infamous life oppressing the locals and defrauding charities. Some thought he had even killed one of his servants. Perhaps his spirit was repentant. It certainly had trouble finding peace. Some evidence of Lambourn Place remains to this date, however all traces of the house itself have long gone.” <hr/> “Henry Hippisley b 1795 of Lambourne Plce was a younger son of the family of Hippisley of Ston Easton, near Bath. He married first 1830, Elizabeth Agnes, dau + heiress of Rev Dr John Nelson of Heytesbury and had five children, son Henry Nelson Hippisley (1839-1894), Capt, RN b 1839, later Rear-Admiral, and four daughters, one of whom married (Beatrice m 1871 Charles Edwards and to whom Lambourn Place passed). Elizabeth died in 1839. He remarried 1851 Elizabeth Mary Sullivan, whose mother was the daughter of Lord Palmerston. By her he had Lawrence Temple Hippisley b 1854, Wm Henry b 1855 and two daus.” The year of birth of Henry Hippisley is given as 1795 but the age at death, as well as census records, indicate that it should be 1808.
