Introduction

In the southern garden of the church's burial ground, behind a wall, is a mausoleum. It is accessed by a gate in the northern wall which leads to a metal grill gate.

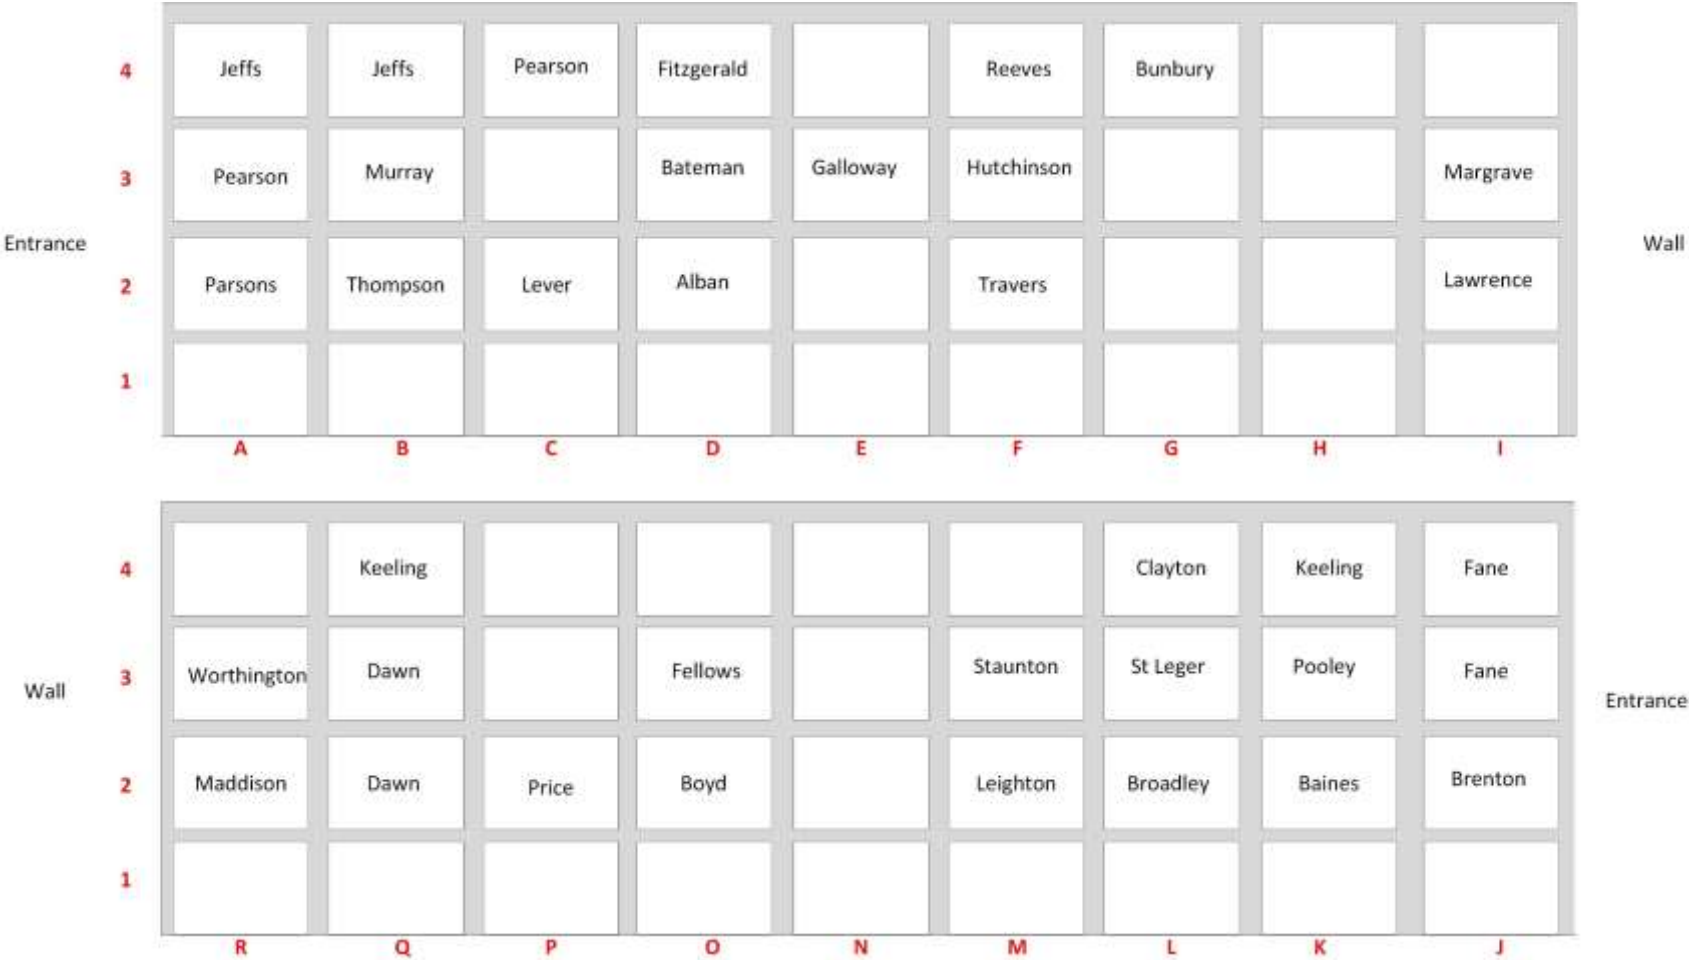

It has sets of compartments on either side of the central passage. There are 9 columns with 4 shelves each on each side. The covering tablets have incised inscriptions, many of these now in poor condition. Not all shelves are occupied and the empty ones have tablets with an incised 'X'. One tablet is broken and this reveals a lead-encased coffin.

The burials date from the 1830s, the earliest one found is from 1834, and the latest from 1860.

The mausoleum was visited on 7 May 2019 during a tour on the church's internal memorials.

In 1837 Lewis mentions Bedford House as the seat of S.S. Raymond. At the time of Griffith's Valuation, it was being leased by Samuel Raymond to Listowel Board of Guardians as an auxilliary workhouse and was valued at €25. Bary notes that this house was associated with the Bateman family and may have been built for the marriage of Colthurst Bateman in 1775. It is now a ruin. Note that there was a burial of Colthurst Bateman (1780-1859) in Bath Abbey Cemetery. He was Sheriff for Monmouth during the Chartist riots that occurred in 1839. |

An 18th century house the residence of the Fitzgerald family in the 18th and 19th centuries. Griffith's Valuation shows that the house was valued at £45 in the mid 19th century and that it was held by Sir Edward Fitzgerald from Matthew Rosengrave. An earlier house reputedly destroyed by fire in the late 18th century stood nearby. The house was bought by the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word in the 1920s. The house was still in use in the 1940s but was demolished in the 1980s. The is now, next to the site of the original house, a Carrogoran House described as an 'assisted living residence'. |

M.P. for Oxfordshire, cousin to John, tenth Earl of Westmoreland, by Lady Elizabeth Parker, daughter of Thomas, third Earl of Macclesfield. In 1796, we find him serving as a Midshipman on board the Terpsichore, of 32 guns, commanded by Captain Richard Bowen, whose gallant action with the Mahonesa, a Spanish frigate of superior force, has been recorded in the preceding part of this work. On the 12th Dec., in the same year, while cruising to the westward of Cadiz, the Terpsichore discovered an enemy's ship about four miles on the weather quarter. Chase was immediately given, and continued, with much manoeuvring on both sides, for nearly 40 hours; during which, from the weather being extremely squally, the Terpsichore sprung her top-masts. At length, however, the stranger, finding it impossible to avoid an action, brought to; and about 10 P.M. on the 13th, Captain Bowen had the satisfaction of getting alongside. A most spirited battle immediately commenced, yard-arm and yard-arm; and, after a hard contest of nearly two hours, the enemy was obliged to surrender. She proved to be la Vestale, French frigate, of 36 guns, and 270 men, 30 of whom, including her commander, were killed, and 37 wounded. The Terpsichore, whose complement, from various causes, had previously been reduced to 166, officers, men, and boys, sustained a loss of 4 killed and 19 wounded; among the latter were Mr. Fane and Captain Bowen's brother, who was the only Lieutenant then on board. . . . Captain Fane obtained post rank, Aug. 30, 1803; and subsequently commanded the |

A French ketch of 14 guns and 60 men, two xebecs of 3 guns and 30 men each, and eight merchant vessels laden with provisions, were then lying in the mole at Palamos, and the senior officer, relying on Captain Fane's knowledge of the place, immediately determined to attempt their destruction. The unfortunate result of this enterprise is thus described by Captain Rogers in his report to the commander-in-chief: ... Captain Fane subsequently commanded the Pomone frigate.
