The Industrial Schools Act of 1857 allowed magistrates to sentence vagrant children aged between 7 and 14 to industrial schools and in 1861 a further act extended the range of 'offences' to: begging, being in the company of reputed thieves, and 'beyond the control of their parents'. Oversight of such schools came under the prison system. In 1881 it moved to the former barracks on the corner of Brougham Hayes and the Lower Bristol Road, adjacent to this cemetery and called the 'Somerset Certified Industrial Home for Boys'. It existed until 1930 and in 1934 the building became a domestic science college.
