Note on graves in Sections X, Y and Z:

Section X

In section X some rows in the western area are designated as XAA rather than in the sequence XA to XG.

Section Z numbering

In section Z, the positions given in the index have annotations ‘below’ and ‘above’. By undertaking a survey of the surviving memorials, it has become apparent that, at some point, the graves were extended southwards towards the railway. However, the row numbers ZA-ZG were re-used with the annotation indicating whether below or above the east-west path. Later the sequence was extended to ZH-ZK but this only seems to apply to plot numbers greater than 40. As the annotations weren’t applied consistently there is therefore an ambiguity about the positions of some graves.

As a result in this survey rows ‘Z above’ as designated as ‘ZZ’.

A fourth member of the gang had a narrow escape. The lightning struck their steel shovels, and hurled the men to the ground. Francis Barker, 23, of Milk Street, received such severe burns—his trousers, in fact, were burned off—that he died within a few minutes. Two other men were rendered unconscious and a fourth man miraculously escaped with only a shock and was able to stagger to his feet." There is a further detailed account in subsequent columns and on p16:
