

BATH ABBEY FLOOR MEMORIALS

CROSS-REFERENCE TO THE PAGES OF THE 1872 TRANSCRIPTIONS

P J Bendall

Feb 2023

This document contains cross-references from the numbers of floor memorials in Bath Abbey to the page numbers in the document:

Inscriptions on the Flat Stones in the Bath Abbey Church copied by Charles P Russell (Parish Clerk) at the Time of the Restoration of the Church in 1872.

This document remains a useful reference despite the recent relaying of the floor memorials and their proposed documentation. As reported in the Church Times of 21 Jan 2022 an element of Bath Abbey's 'Footprint' project involves the repair and conservation of the floor, the removal of the Victorian pews and relaying floor memorials as close as possible to their original positions. The living and the dead; an investigation into the status of erasure within the floor of Bath Abbey by David Littlefield (Interiors, Volume 7, Issue 1 (2016)) has in its abstract that 'The author argues that the stones which are most out of place or worn to a state of erasure are no less authentic than their intact equivalents, but that they can be considered to have moved to another state of authenticity rich in resonance and meaning.' Those searching for a memorial to a relative may have a different perspective.

The 1872 document contains hand-written transcriptions of the inscriptions with depictions on tracing paper of coats of arms. In the first few dozen or so pages the numbers of the floor memorials are not in ascending order ranging from 2 to 348. Thereafter they are mainly in ascending order with between one and half a dozen entries per page. As a result, going from a memorial number to the page for the transcription is not straightforward. In addition, there are some duplicate memorial numbers. For example, memorial 421 appears on page 144 for a Harvey memorial and also on page 145 for a Roycoft slab in the south aisle. There are two memorials numbered 541. Some are unnumbered, for example the Henshaw memorial on page 152. There are a couple of occurrences where a dot has been used instead of terminal zero in the numbering eg '47.' while the ordering would suggest '470'. There are some duplicates which have been corrected, for example two occurrences of '541' but '542' omitted. A page between 199 and 200 (numbered 300) has memorials numbered 50-53, which correspond to 540, 429, 119 and 531 documented separately. A peculiarity of the handwriting is that the '9' sometimes resembles a '4' and 'a' looks like a 'u'.

There are 286 numbered pages of transcriptions with a small number of additional inserted pages with an 'x' appended. This is followed by a 2-page appendix of 47 'gravestones inscriptions not now found' but recorded in 1719 in The History and Antiquity of the Cathedral Church of Salisbury and the Abbey Church of Bath by Dr Richard Rawlinson with a reference to the page in the volume where they are referenced and then transcriptions of these missing inscriptions. There is then an index based on the first letter of the surname giving the page number. Thus 'Cooban Amelia 10' is for memorial 242 which appears on page 10. At the end is a map of the layout of the Abbey with the positions of the memorials numbered.

The introduction to the document has:

The following Copy of transcriptions was unfinished at the time of my Father[’s] death in February 1887 His rough notes have however enabled me to complete the entries from No 427 to the end.

The Coats of Arms of my very few had been drawn, have also been finished, though with draughtmanship greatly inferior to my father,

The Index plan which accompanies this Book shows the positions of all the Grave Stones except those containing the inscriptions numbered 666.-671-700 (under the Organ) 802. 815. 816 818. 830-833. 835-840.

R. . . . The History and Antiquity of the Cathedral Church of Salisbury and the Abbey Church of Bath by Dr Rich Rawlinson published in 1719.

An Appendix (Page 287) gives a list of Inscriptions given by Dr Rawlinson but not now found.

A small accompanying Book contains an Index to all Wall monuments in the Church in 1876.

A short accompanying Manuscript contains particulars of some other Inscriptions existing in 1676.
