Introduction

The church of All Saints, Farmborough

From the Imperial Gazetteer of England and Wales 1870-1872 by John Maris Wilson;
FARMBOROUGH, a parish in Clutton district, Somerset; $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles SW of Twerton r. station, and $6\frac{1}{2}$ SW by W of Bath. It has a post office under Bath. Acres, 1,494. Real property, £4,313. Pop., 965. Houses, 225. The property is much subdivided. The living is a rectory in the diocese of Wells. Value, £420.* Patron, the Rev. Dr. Lord. The church is old but good; and there is a Wesleyan chapel.

From The History and Antiquities of the County of Somerset Vol II (1791) p423 by Rev John Collinson:

The village, anciently written Ferenberge, is situated on the turnpike-road from Bath to Wells, eight miles distant from the former, and eleven miles from the latter, in a vale watered by a little stream, formed by a spring which rises in Barrow-

Hill near Clutton, and runs into the Avon near Twiverton by Bath. The land of this parish is chiefly pasture. There is a large coal-work hers, about a mile southwest from the church, called Haygrove, long noted for admirable fuel.

The Church of All Saints, Farmborough is reputed to be from the 15th century but with a major renovation in 1869.

From the Bristol Mirror of Sat 7 Mar 1818 reporting on a storm has:

BATH, March 6.—We dread reading accounts from the coast as we fear the violence of the Storm on Tuesday and Wednesday night may have caused deplorable effects among the shipping. In this city and neighbourhood, it raged with tremendous fury—thunder, lightning, hail, rain, and wind, successively vented astounding horrors . . . Farmborough Church, we hear, was unroofed, and two of the turrets blown down. . . .”.

From the Bath Chronicle of Thu 27 Feb 1868 p7:

At the monthly meeting of the Incorporated Church Building Society last week a grant was made for increasing the accommodation in Farmborough Church, near Bath.

The Bath Chronicle of Thu 2 Apr 1868 p8 has an advert inviting builders to submit tenders for making repairs and addition to the church. From the Bath Chronicle of Thu 20 May 1869 p8

The parish church of Farmborough is being restored under the superintendence of Mr.

J. Elkington Gill. The cost of the restoration will be about £900, and in aid of this a bazaar was held in the village last week, from which it is believed about £40 will be realized.

From the Bath Chronicle of Thu 18 Nov 1869 p5:

RE-OPENING OF FARMBOROUGH CHURCH

The parish church of the ancient village of Farmborough, near this city, having been restored and considerably enlarged, was formally re-opened yesterday, several special services being held in honour of the occasion. To give an idea of the nature and extent of the work which has been so well commenced by the Rector, it may be as well to state briefly the condition of things in the past. The church, like the village, stands in a vale to the left of the road leading from Bath to Wells, about eight and a half miles from the first named city. It was a small building, dedicated to All Saints, consisting of a nave, chancel and tower at the west end, the latter, which was shut off from the body of the church, containing six bells. There was a gallery at the west end, and a considerable space was similarly occupied on the north and south sides. The interior of the building was really in a very cold and wretched state, and filled with large high separating pews, the occupants facing some one way and some another. It was the intention of the late rector and patron of the living, the Rev. Dr. Lord, to have restored the church, but his sudden death in the early part of 1867 necessitated the postponement of the work sine die. Dr. Lord was succeeded in the rectory by his son, the Rev. F. B. Lord, who quickly took steps to improve the condition of the church, and for that purpose sought the professional advice of Mr. J. Elkington Gill, of this city. The Rector was materially assisted in the work by residents in the neighbourhood, and the Diocesan and Incorporated Church Building Societies lent pecuniary aid, the grant of the last named society being made on the condition that 100 sittings in the church were set apart for the poor. The alterations were commenced in the spring of the present year, and although, from lack of funds, the entire plan has not been carried out, the work that has been done is complete in itself, and the due and proper performance of Divine service is now provided for. What remains to be accomplished must be done as means are furnished. The church, as it now stands, presents a striking contrast to its predecessor. The north wall of the nave was taken down, and arcade has been erected which separates it from the north aisle, nearly as wide as the nave itself. The unsightly galleries have been removed, and a small organ chamber has been formed at the east end of the north aisle, the old font has been removed from the body of the church and placed near the principal entrance, which is in the north aisle, and is intended to be protected by a perch. The chancel is separated from the nave by a new screen with wrought iron gates, and the space within the altar rails is paved with encaustic tiles¹. The pavement of the rest of the chancel sadly requires renewing, but this cannot be done at present for the reason already given. There is a very good stained glass window by Wailes², but this, we are informed, was not new. The tower, which is a good specimen of Somerset Perpendicular work, remains intact but great improvement has been made in the interior arrangements. The partition which formerly separated the tower from the nave has been entirely removed; the tower, which is thus thrown into the body of the church is used as a belfry, the ringers standing on a level with the floor of the rest of the building, instead of being confined in an elevated chamber. We need hardly say that the old ugly old fashioned pews have disappeared, and they have been supplanted by spacious open benches capable of seating nearly 300 persons, being an increase in the accommodations previously provided. The church is lighted by small iron brackets fixed to the pillar and walls. In pulling down the walls a few remains of the original church were found, and these have been carefully preserved by being let into the old wall. . . . To show that the plan is not nearly completed, it is only necessary to mention that special donations are wanted for an organ, a north porch, new doors, stove, or warming apparatus, new windows in the south side of the nave, new floors to the chancel and tower, kneeling hassocks, pulpit, Litany-desk, font cover and lining, curtains for doors, &c. The works have been carried out under the superintendence of Mr. J. Elkington Gill³, the builder being Mr. Anstey, of Pensford.

From the plan of the church and the numbers of the seats for the poor, it was only the pews on the right-hand (southern) side of nave that were able to be reserved through payment of a pew-rent.

The porch and pulpit seem to date from late 1874 as the report on the harvest festival service has the offertory going to the porch & pulpit fund (Bristol Times and Mirror Wed 7 Oct 1874 p3) whereas the church contains a framed notice of a dedication service which took place on 2 Nov 1874 with “all the offertories during the Festival go towards the Porch & Pulpit debt”.

An annotation in the burial register has “April 15 1909. Consecration of the extension to the Churchyard on a portion of glebe land to the north of the present churchyard the land being given by ¹ Encaustic tiles are ceramic tiles in which the pattern or figure on the surface is not a product of the glaze but of different colours of clay. They were commonly used in nineteenth-century church restorations in the locality.

² William Wailes (1808-1881) owned a workshop where stained glass windows were made for numerous churches. He worked for a time with the architect Augustus Pugin (1812-1852).

me W Clement Ketchley, Rector". The Bath Chronicle of Thu 8 Apr 1909 p1 reported on the consecration of the extension of the churchyard by the Bishop of Bath & Wells (Dr Kennion) that had occurred the previous day. This refers to the plot being 'on the south-west of the church'. Reporting on the talk given by the bishop 'The addition just consecrated would ensure that the inhabitants of that parish might be buried near their fathers. The expense of enclosing the new portion had been met by the Squire, Mr. Popham, of Littlecote, and by the ratepayers in the parish. . . . The gift of the land was due to the great goodwill of their Rector.'

From the Somerset Guardian of Fri 4 Jul 1930 p1: Farmborough Churchyard.

The old churchyard connected with the Parish Church at Farmborough has been in existence for about 600 years. It is not surprising, therefore, that the Church Council are anxious to effect an extension of the existing burial ground. A severe handicap to their ambition is lack of money, and the necessary expenditure entailed will be fairly considerable. With the object of raising funds for their purpose, they are holding a garden fete to-morrow (Saturday) in the rectory gardens at Farmborough. There will be the usual attractions, and Lady Weymouth has kindly promised to perform the opening ceremony at 3 o'clock.

From the Bath Weekly Chronicle and Herald of Sat 23 Jul 1959 p16:

NOTES & QUERIES of Interest to Bath Somerset & Wilts

NOTES—No. 919 Church Services 70 Years Ago (contd.)

During his peregrination of the Village churches in the vicinity of Bath in the 'seventies (collected in the "Church Rambler," 2 vols. 1876-8). Harold Lewis found evidence of the church revival which had started some years earlier. At Farmborough, on Christmas morning 1875, he attended a high celebration of the Holy Eucharist, which he describes in detail.

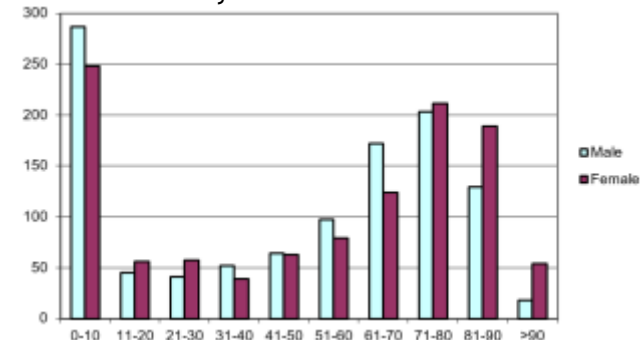

"it would be mere affectation." he adds, "to pretend to be unaware that a service such as I have described will be obnoxious to the convictions of many of my readers. In justice therefore to the sincerity and zeal of the Rector (the Rev. F. Lord). I must ask them to consider with it the manner in which the work of the parish is carried on.

"Farmborough has a population 915, but very scattered, and many of these live close to High Littleton Church, leaving about 650 to the parish, church. There are four Nonconformist chapels in the parish, which grew up when the religious work of the parish was sadly neglected years ago by the proper minister."

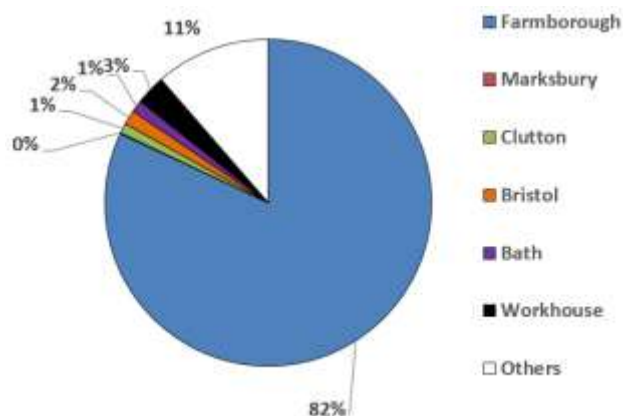

The author then goes on to instance the church schools, the guilds, and the social work, as proof of the active life of the parish. Regarding the Rector, he pertinently concludes, "If he is respected and beloved by his flock, questions of ritual and practice, though not divested of their intrinsic import, become matters of secondary consideration."

The church was given Grade II* listing in 1960.

The parish is now part of the benefice of Farmborough, Marksbury and Stanton Prior within the archdeaconry of Bath.

Of those buried 24% were aged under 11 and 36% aged 70 and above.

Of the 2,204 burial register entries with abodes specified, 82% are given as Farmborough, there are small numbers from nearby villages and towns and about 3% as the workhouse at Clutton.

Burial Registers

At Somerset Heritage Centre:

The register from 1-Feb-2001 is with the parish.

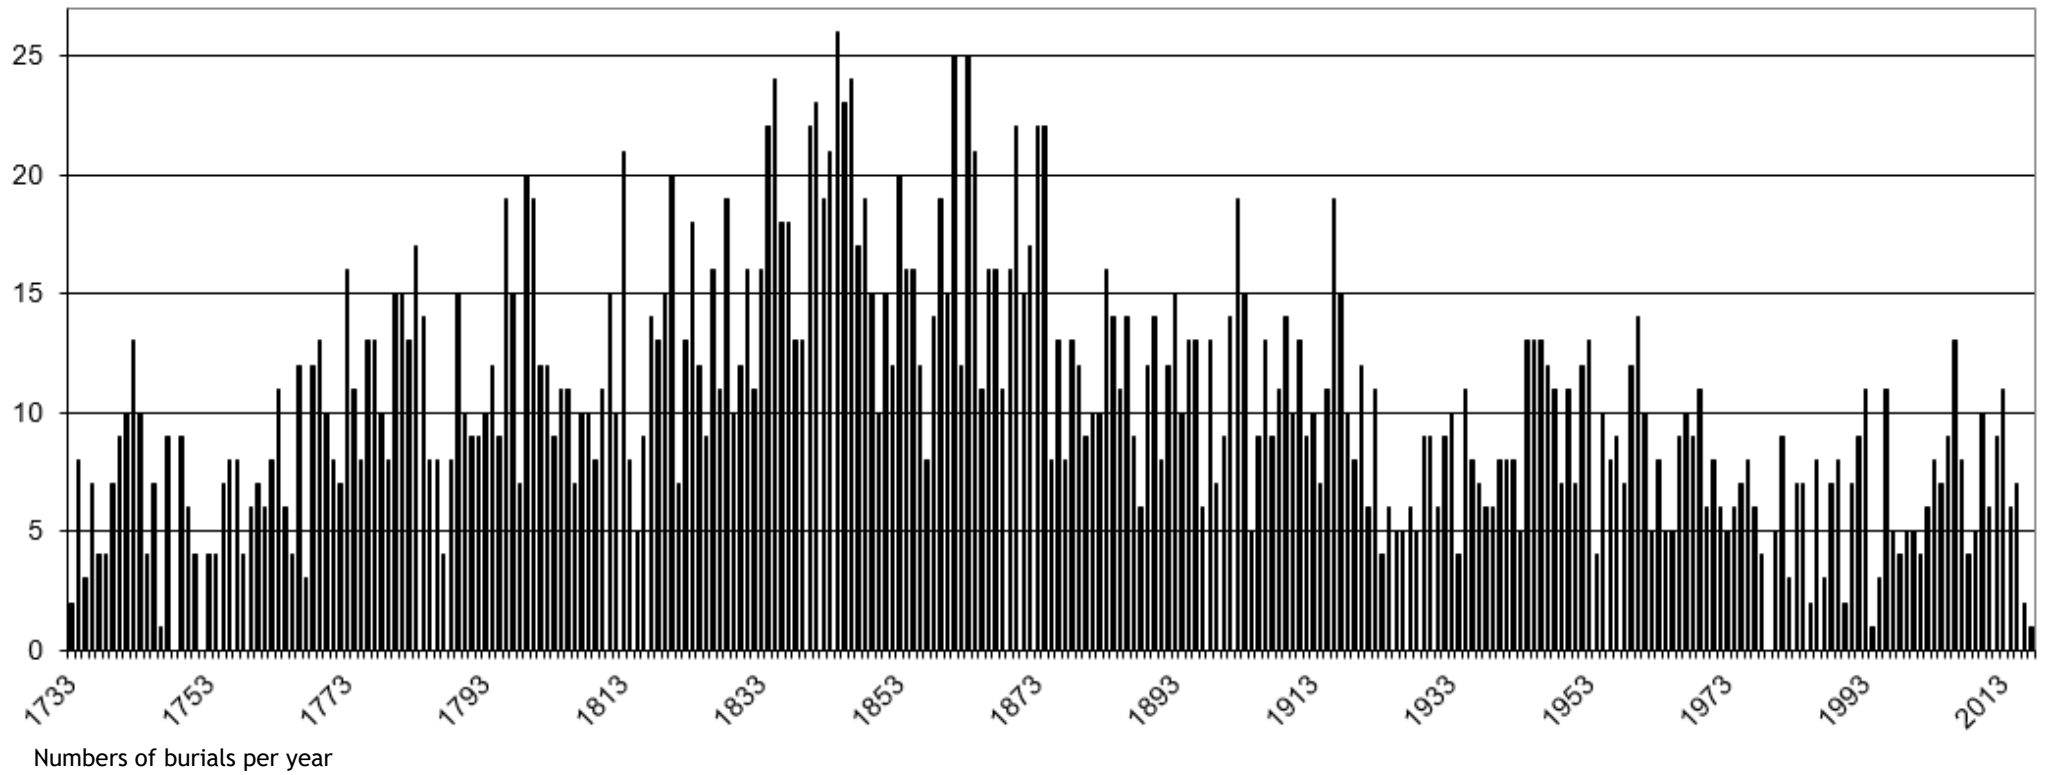

Previous Survey

A survey was carried out in 1998. This includes maps showing the locations of the memorials on 8 sheets. These sheet numbers define 'sections' which were subsequently used in the registers to identify locations. The documentation of the inscriptions consists of handwritten transcriptions (all in uppercase) and a summary description of the type of memorial. There are no images of memorials.

Acknowledgements

I am grateful to Rev Jan Knott for giving access to the current burial register and the material on the previous survey. Also, I thank Patrick Bridges for giving access to the memorials in the tower which are not usually accessible.

Layout

The memorials are on all four sides of the church. The oldest memorials are close to the church on the northern and southern sides. The 1909 extension would seem to be the section in the south where the graves had been arranged in a grid.

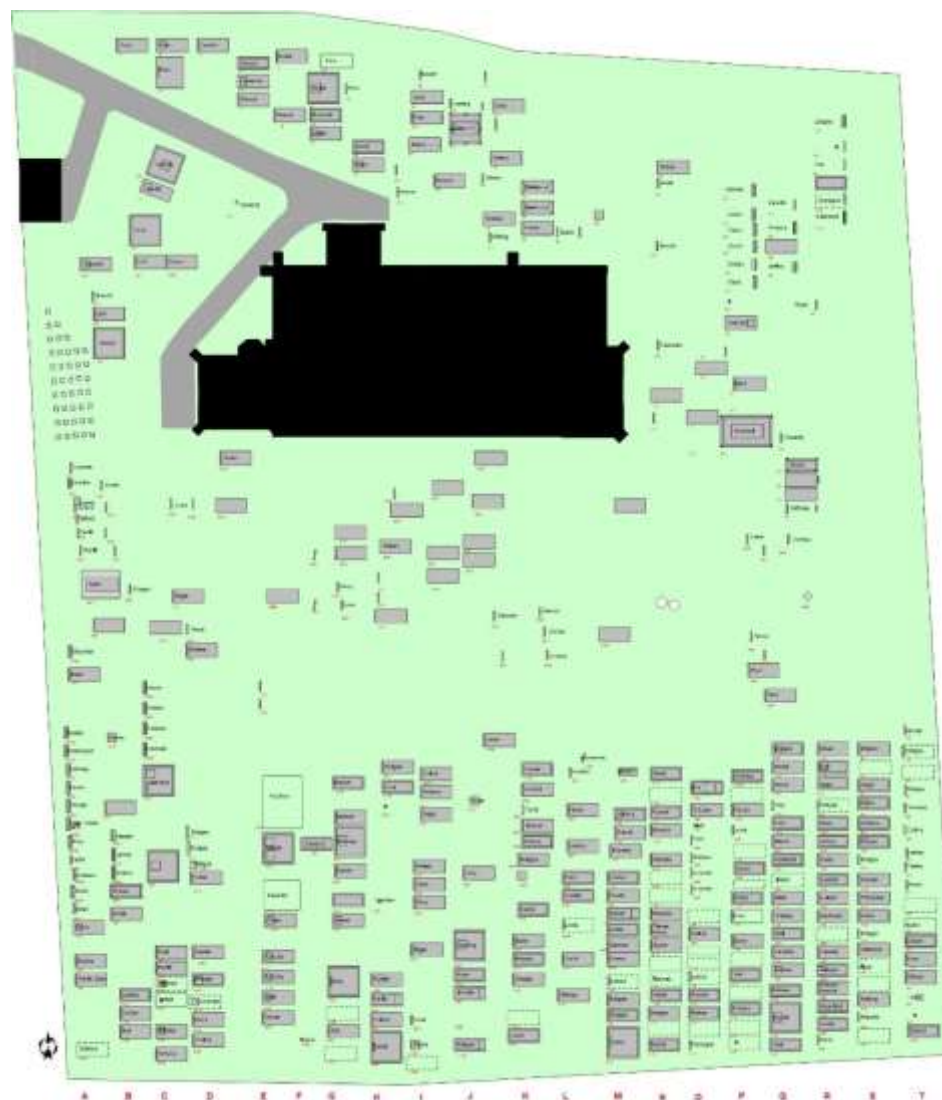

An arrangement of cremation plaques is west of the church. In the north-eastern section are rows of recent burials.

The parish has a map which shows the arrangement of the graves. This is annotated with the month/year of burials. However, this is not exact as there can be more than one burial in a month. In addition, the month seems to be when the grave was dug, not when the burial took place. Presumably this is a cross-reference to an unknown grave register. By a process of reconciliation, matching and elimination it is possible to assign plots to burial register entries and confirm these through a survey. That map uses three different conventions for designating a plot:

- a unique number
- a row and plot/memorial number
- section numbers

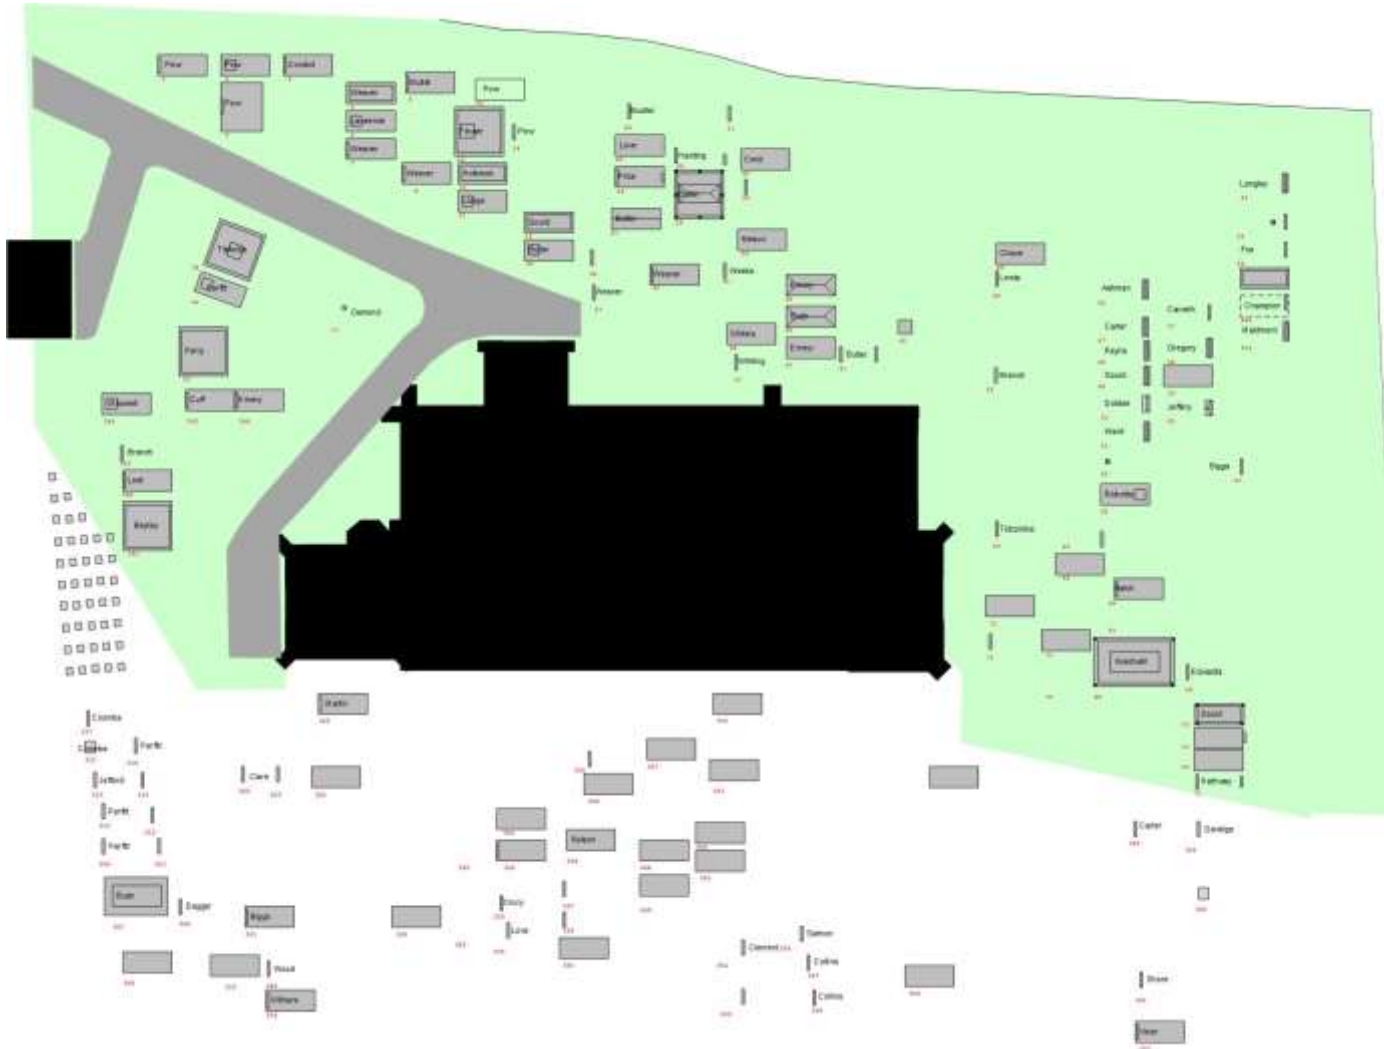

The section numbers are arbitrary and do not correspond with visible divisions within the graveyard. The row numbers used for the southern section run from A at the western end to T at the eastern end. In the same area the grave numbers run in the order direction from 78 in the east to 308 at the south-western corner.

Here the unique memorial numbers in the previous map are used with, for the new southern sections arranged in a grid, these grouped by the row letter.

The Indulgence was issued for England on 4 Apr 1687. It removed penalties imposed on non-Anglicans. Fiercely opposed by Anglican clergy, seven bishops, including Thomas Ken, refused the order to have it read out in every church; they were put on trial for seditious libel and acquitted. This royal declaration (rather than an act of parliament) was made null and void in 1688 by the coup d'état usually called the Glorious Revolution and subsequent Bill of Rights of 1689 and Act of Settlement of 1701. Conducted by the rector, the Rev. J. R. Foster, a service was held at All Saints' Church, Farmborough, at which the Archdeacon of Bath, the Ven. S. A. Boyd dedicated the stained-glass window, which was a gift to the church from the Rev. J. R. Foster. It had been placed in the tower at the east end of the nave. The window occupied a similar position at Christ Church, Brighton, for nearly 100 years, and is a replica of one in New College, Oxford. Mrs Moulds played the organ. There was a similar article in the Bath Chronicle and Herald of Sat 5 Sep 1931 p 21. This has: "The three principal lights of the window depict life-size figures representing Faith Hope and Charity. Above these is floreated tracery, with a centre piece showing the Cross and Crown of Thorns, with a Brazen Serpent on the right." From Alumni Cantabrigiensis: James Richard Foster Adm. pens. at ST JOHN'S, June 16, 1894.
